

Missions Conference

April 20-22, 2018

When Mordecai was counseling his niece to intercede for her people in a potentially life-threatening situation, he reminded her that it was possible that God uniquely placed her there, “For such a time as this.” This served to be both a sober reminder of God’s sovereignty and an empowering call to action.

Just like Esther needed to respond in her unique situation, so we are called to respond faithfully in ours. We stand on an amazing work of evangelism where we have been the beneficiaries of the obedience of those who have gone before us, and now it is our time to take the Gospel to people and places where it has never been heard. This applies both to unreached nations on the other side of the globe and to our family and friends that we see every day.

Winter SWO

Weekends in December - February

The unfortunate reality is that for many of our churches today, we have totally neglected the Old Testament because, well... it's old. But we need to remember that this is God's Word to us and it still has value to the New Testament believer. It is through the study of the Old Testament that we can see more of the beauty of the Gospel as we reflect on the way that God was preparing His people for His Messiah, Jesus Christ.

Our goal in this retreat will be to use specific examples from the Old Testament to reveal the patterns and types that were shadows of the Gospel of Jesus. In doing so we can more fully appreciate the way that God used the history of the Jewish people to prepare the world for the life-changing message of the Gospel.
